

IMN's TEXAS ECONOMIC RECOVERY CONFERENCE

<http://www.imn.org/Conference/IMN-Texas-Economic-Recovery-Conference/Home.html>

Dear Colleague:

With the unemployment rate stubbornly staying north of 9% job creation has in recent weeks become – at long last, some might say – the #1 national strategic priority. President Obama is traveling around the country as Champion-in-Chief, building support for the American Jobs Act, while Republican Presidential hopeful Rick Perry is himself campaigning on his perceived success at creating a jobs juggernaut in Texas. And it is both the Lone Star State's unique and compelling story as well as the national debate – as the two are inextricably linked, now more than ever – that will be on the agenda in Austin this November at the IMN Texas Economic Recovery Conference.

With new speakers confirming daily, including representatives from municipal government, global resources and the Silicon Hills tech sector confirming in the last few days, the conference continues to build momentum. Indeed it is garnering support from a wide range of participants in both the public and private sectors, all of whom share a keen interest in helping to shape the economic development of this vitally important slice of American society.
